THE HAMLET OF BRETTFORD

BRETTFORD is situated on the Fosse Way which crosses the River Avon. In ancient times there was a ford to cross the river, hence the name of Broadford or Brettas-Ford (the ford of the Britons).

The pathway which runs parallel to the Fosse may also have been a Roman pathway (Tutbury Lane) up to Brinklow where there is the finest Norman Castle mound in England.

Early in the 13th century, Nicholas de Verdun obtained a charter for a weekly market in the village. Theobold de Verdon set up gallows in the village as a deterrent to travellers on the Fosse Way. The Hospital of St. Edmand was founded in the 12th century and was run by nuns. A little later a bridge was built and between 1327 and 1332 records show that a lay subsidy toll was levied on all moveable goods of the value of 10 shillings or above. The amount collected for the Parish of Wolston was £9.2¼d. which was more than the total for Alcester or Birmingham.

The church tower of Kings Newham that can be seen, is all that remains of the once Saxon church. A number of coffins were found there belonging to the Leigh family.

A considerable number of circular ditched enclosures have been found from the air probably late Neolithic or early Bronze Age.

Down the road is what is believed to be Roman Baths from a natural spring.

Four miles up the road is Coombe Abbey, the former home of the Earl of Craven. The grounds, which were landscaped by Capability Brown, have now become a country park with bird gardens and nature walks.

The whole of the area around was at one time vastly wooded - difficult to imagine now!
